Frozen to Death in a New York House.

Boys Said It Was No Use to Go Hom at Luncheon Hour-Bread Line at the Bowery Exceeded the Loaves-Unemployed Hope for Snow to Shovel

New York, Feb. 5 .- After having dropped to a low record mark for the season, the temperature late to-day lifted just enough to shake loose the second real thing snow that New Yorkers have seen this winter.

The advent of the snow was timed to catch the homeward bound thousands who had gone to office and shop rubberiess and without umbrellas on as nearly perfect a winter morning as could be imagined. Nearly all weather held crisp and clear and of lords. coaxed out the Fifth avenue throng and filled the parks where the suspended red ball invited he tens of thousands to skate.

While the happy crowds made merry on the park takes the charitable socicties were doling out mercy to the "other side" of New York life. Penetrating a dingy nook in the garret floor of a Pitt street tenement agents of the Children's society found a mother and two children hudd'ed about a fireless stove mutely waiting death Julius, aged 5, and Minnie, 4 years old, had long since died. Fainting women, many with babies in their arm plead pitifully for food first for their young and then for themselves. Long before eleven o'clock, the hour for food distribution the Bowery bread line, numbered many more than did the loaves to be dealt out.

In the early night there was little wind and the snow piled up an even layer that promised before midnight to reach the four inches depth. That means the removing contractors must take hold. Hundreds of men anxious for employment gathered early at the agencies and silently prayed that the flakes would pile higher. The weather man was inclined to look for rain in the morning and the difference between rain and snow in the next few hours will be a difference of many dollars to New York's
